The Seven Mile Dam is ex pected to produce its first power in 1980 and initially yield 525,000 kilowatts with provision for another 175,000-kilowatt generator

Resources Minister Bob Williams announced the approval Friday and said all power generated at the dam will be consumed in B.C.

He said the dam will flood about 500 acres but will have the least environmental impact of any potential dam site

Nearly 1,000 people will be employed at the project dur-ing the peak of construction and Williams said the project will draw on the skilled labor force already in the area winding up work on the Koo-

Autopac Rates To Jump 14-19%

WINNIPEG (CP) Increases of from 14 to 19.5 per cent on basic automobile insurance plus a proposed insurance tax on gasoline of two cents a gallon were an-nounced Friday by the Mani-toba Public Insurance Cor-

In addition, the demerit point surcharge is to be in-creased by $25 a level and driver insurance premiums will be increased by $5 each

The basic government package, compulsory in Manitoba, is for $50,000 public liability and $200 deductible for collialso announced at a news conference that the limits of extended liability coverage, which is optional, have been increased.

Besides the levels of $100,000, $200,000 and $300,000 of public liability previously offered, a motorist can obtain limits of $500,000 or up to $1

Uruski said the increases in basic insurance coverage under Autopac reflects the in-creasing value of automobiles and the rising costs of repairs and related services.

He said the increases, de-pending upon total number of claims in the coming fiscal year beginning March 1, should return $11 million in the eight-month period from March to December. About $3 million of that will be through the new tax on gasoline and motive fuel oil.

The gasoline tax will have to be approved by the legislature so it cannot be put into effect until late spring.

The increases are the third consecutive hikes made by Autopac, the official name for the insurance corporation. Last year the basic cost for the compulsory insurance increased by an average of 11 per cent.

The plan operated at a defi-1972-73' and Uruski said it is expected a similar deficit will be experienced in the current fiscal year. He said the actual figures for the current year will not be made known before the next sitting of the legislature expected sometime in late February.

Uruski said the latest in-creases contain a "deficit re-ducing feature." He said it is hoped $1 or $2 million could be applied against the deficit.

The introduction of the proposed gasoline insurance pre mium is designed to permi premium equalization of northern Manitoba with that of Winnipeg.

guess the number of birds in the flock. And guess they must because the flock, to all intents and puropses, has dia-peared among the dense evergreen foliage. Their guesses range from 200 to 700 with a 400 thrown in for good measure.

After some discussion, being reasonable sorts, the birdwatchers decide to accept the 400 figure, it being "nice round number," And 400 Pine Siskins are entered into the

This hypothetical scene, or something very like it, must have been repeated hundreds of times all over North America during the Christmas holiday as thousands of well-meaning but often thoroughly baffled birdwatchers tried to cope with the pitfalls of es-timating the numbers of birds in large, rapidly moving, and often only briefly-seen flocks. It may be of no great import that our flock of Pine Siskins ranged from 200 to 700, if the numbers are simply to satisfy the curiosity of those who saw it; but if the figure ultimately becomes part of a continental bird population estimate, as they do in Christmas Birds Counts, then the question of its accuracy becomes important.

If you've ever tried to make a quick estimate of the unmbers in a densely-packed, twisting and weaving, rapidly moving flock of birds, you'll-know what the birdwatchers are up against. Actual counts, at such times, are inpossible. Guesses are the only recourse and these may be qualified, educated guesses or grossly inaccurate stab-in-the-dark. But, according to Robert Arbib, writing in a recent issue of American Birds, they need not be the latter.

Arbib contends that with a little self-training anyone can become proficient at estimat-ing bird numbers and the process of learning can be as simple as rolling a handful of beans across a table.

You can use rice grains, sunflower seeds, dried peas or any other small item that can be grasped by the handful and scattered across a table top. A pad and a pencil-to record your estimates and the actual counts—would be handy too. According to Arbib, it's im units in your first experiments below 50.

Start by scattering a small handful of your chosen units across the fable. Take a quick three second look and record the first number that seems correct. Now .count. and Don't be disappointed i you're a mile out. Keep at it Eventually, with practice, using different handfuls each time, your quick guesses get closer and closer to the actual number involved.

Don't move on to higher numbers—100 or more—until you've mastered the 50's by bringing your average error below 5 per cent.

Once the 50's have been mastered move on to the 100's, and repeating the experiments, work with numbers less than 100 until your estimates are regularly running 95 per cent correct.

Now you're ready for the 1000's which—with the 100's—are the most important to memorize because they will to memorize because they will be the basic components in estimating the size of really

FORD 'AGREES' ON FORCE FOR OIL

WASHINGTON (AP) - U.S. State Secretary Henry Kissinger says Presidntt Ford agrees with his statement that the United States could, in a grave emergency, use military force against Middle East oil producers.

"I reflect the views of the president," Kissinger told reporters Friday, referring to an interview with Business Week in which he said: "I am not saying there's no circumstances where we would not use force.'

But he said he cannot foresee any possibility of a situa-tion calling for the use of military forces in the Middle East. Referring to the interview, Kissinger said: "What I said was carefully considered. We do not consider the present situation the gravest emergency.

A Humane Way of Killing?

The recent killings of policemen in Moncton, N.B., in Calgary and in the Vancouver suburbs of Delta and Surrey has revived again Canada's continuing debate on capital punishment, as it relates to those who murder police officers or prison guards. Feelings run high on the issue.

From the prairies came talk of a national police strike if the federal cabinet continued its policy stretching back to 1968 - of commuting the mandatory death sentences to life imprisonment for those convicted of murdering a law

Victoria police chief Jack Gregory, in his capacity as president of the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police, has also contributed to the debate. He said this week that a better "more humane" way of carrying out capital punishment should be found.

Hanging is the traditional method in Canada, although it is notoriously inefficient and sometimes messy. A man's heart has been known to beat on for most of an hour while he dangles from the noose. Sometimes a hangman will miscalculate - hard-boiled police reporters have vomited at the resulting sight, as the condemned man is unintentionally decapitated.

But is there a more humane way, a more decent and honorable method of forcibly putting an end to one man's life?

The guillotine, for example? The French speak highly of it apparently one doesn't feel a thing, but that's purely a subjective opinion, so to speak. Nobody has ever survived a beheading.

What about the gas chamber? Strapped into a sturdy seat inside a small airtight room, watching witnesses watching through thick glass as lethal pellets drop into acid and the choking cyanide fumes fill one's lungs. Humane?

Or the garotte, recently popularized by a famous gangster movie and used in real life with such effect on dozens of students in Ethiopia? Piano wire was the instrument in the latter - very quick and quiet apparently.

There's always the old American faithful, the electric chair sizzling and smoking as thousands of volts surge through the body. Modern, enlightened opinion, however, tends towards a variation of the old Roman favorite of opening the veins in a warm bath - an injection of some fast-acting poison.

The recitation of all the absurd and bizarre ways in which man sanctions execution of his fellows should demonstrate that there is no humane method of capital punishment — it is a glaring contradiction in terms.

Those who favor killing the killers - easy to find, the favored catchphrase bleeding heart studs any discussion of the subject - always mention the victims, the dead and their suffering families.

Execution of the person responsible for the senseless death doesn't bring back the dead, and the deterrent effect of capital punishment is pretty tenuous. It should be seen for what it is simple cold-blooded revenge. A change in the present situation is probably needed, but those clamoring for the death penalty should work instead for the real necessary reform, to ensure that socalled life imprisonment is actually that, instead of the decade or so that the average convicted muran, in a bumbling lackadaisacal way. A reporter in Ottawa tried to telephone the Emergency Measures Organization national headquarters the other day. wealth. In future, Canadians are going to be forced by circumstances into even greater sharing, and this will not be easy; but I know that we will be equal to the challenge facing the entire country, and thus, each one of us."

Not too surprising from the leader of a government which has been fighting for a year now to get a larger share of resource revenue from the provinces. What seems mildly surprising is Barrett's attitude, however, all sweetness and light. In his New Year's message, the B.C. premier said:

ister is to get yourself followed. Walking down from the centre block of the parliament buildings the other day to attend a press conference called by Pierre Trudeau I realized that Trudeau was in ront of me, accompanied by two aides, then twenty feet behind them a security officer, then myself keeping pace another twenty feet behind him, and behind me. I realized abruptly, an unmarked RCMP car cruising along at walking

At the entrance to the National Press Building two teenage girls sat waiting for a bus; they recognized him, nudged each other and giggled.

"A Canadian statesman and politician who carries so many conflicting descriptions it is almost impossible to sort out the real man — which perhaps was a key to his great success.'

Trudeau made that comment a fortnight ago on the 100th anniversary of his predecessor William Lyon Mackenzie king, whom he greatly admires though it s unfashionable these days to do so. Tru-

Seldom if ever have the contrasts in the man been sharper than they have been this year. Once patronized as a philosopher-king and a playboy who Trudeau's concerns are more particular. He came into politics, as he reiterated and emphasized in his speech at the formed himself into a total politician and won an electoral victory that has few parallels in Canadian history.

Once described by aides and friends as sensitive to a fault in his personal dealings. Trudeau last summer turned around and dropped four ministers from his cabinet, the first time any prime minister has done this at Ottawa.

The contradictions go on and on. The ablest intellect, except possibly for Arthur Meighen, to occupy the second floor prime ministerial office in the east block, Trudeau at that press conference presented without a smile or hesitation a political argument that as a professor he would have laughed at from ,a firstvear student.

The government, said Trudeau, was not responsible for the proposed 50-percent pay increase for MPs — all it had done was what the MPs themselves had proposed. Quite aside from Trudeau's 63per-cent increase which no MP suggested, Trudeau didn't explain why the government had decided to implement the proposals at all.

The most important contrast is that Trudeau is at a peak of personal authority and yet, in a very odd way, he seems to matter less than at any time during his nearly eight years in power.

He's in command, there's no question about that. In Washington, for example, Trudeau announced that Canada would renew the air defence agreement with the U.S. although this item had not even been discussed in cabinet.

In command of what, and for what purpose is the question. Increasingly the government seems to run itself, a machine that solves problems with reasonable efficiency but without purpose, Trudeau, in a manner that reminds one of Louis St. Laurent, looks more and more like the chairman of the board.

Partly this is because Trudeau's personality and indiosyncrasies are so well known they no longer fascinate. Only one broadcasting network, French or English, radio or television, bothered to ask him for a year-end interview. Margaret scoops up all the celebrity attention.

More profoundly, the issues that absorb Canadians these days are all economic, and on these subjects Trudeau has little to say, or even to contribute. Finance Minister John Turner has performed with such uncanny political skill this past year that it is economic judgements that matter, and are seen by the public to matter.

gualism "irreversible" and to secure Quebec within confederation. Bilin gualism and constitutional reform may still be important but today they pale by comparison to the basic issues of inflation, recession, oil and food shortages. Lacking a cause to plead, Trudeau's role has become to chair the cabinet.

Trudeau makes a good chairman. He knows how to handle the press, which chairmen of the board must be able to do in these days of consumerism and public accountability. He gets the necessary business done. He has learned how to retire board members who've outlived

Finally, Trudeau has defined a style of leadership that is perfect for a chairman of the board — perfect, that is, for a chairman who wants to run things rather than to go places. It is, he said at his press conference, a "collegial" leadership, searching out a consensus rather than "riding a white horse, saying follow me." Mackenzie King, the greatest follower of all but a great chairman of the board also, would have approved. And perhaps he does, from the other side

In the wake of the Christmas and New Year holidays a hiatus exists in the daily litany of hits and misses chronicled by your daily newspaper. Premier Barrett is probably busy preparing his budget and the federal MPs are hunkered down at the grass roots vainly at tempting to explain why they should be in the top one-half per cent of Canadian wage earners. Even the weather seems undecided about how it will introduce winter to most parts of Canada. But some things never change. That pious group, or should I say lobby, of hotelmen, the British Columbia Hotels' Association has mounted a public campaign against nudity in hotel beer parlors. Recent amendments to B.C. liquor legislation allows live entertainment in beer parlors and some beer barons, apparently, have introduced nude dancing to entice customers.

Now the hotelmen don't criticize nudity on the grounds that it exploits and humiliates employees. No. no. they simply say that "this extreme interpretation of the regulations . . . reflects dis-favorably on the calibre of the associa-Digging a little deeper, it seems the hotelmen were complaining about the costs of strippers. They charge $200 per week and up, which cuts into the comfortable profits that almost every beer parlor makes.

Until recently B.C.'s draconian liquor regulations -- no fun, games or entertainment in beer parlors, just guzzling had the effect of making some hotelmen rich. Now the association has dressed itself in the best Canadian gothic in order to save a few bucks. From the public point of view it's flat beer. It is up to the provincial government to legislate on nude dancing; the hotelmen should stick to slinging beer at up to 40 cents a nine-

A footnote to small beer: In Alberta the price of a seven and one-quarter ounce glass of beer rose in October from 20 to 25 cents. And when Alberta introduced entertainment in beer parlors some years ago the price per glass was not increased. "Entertainment has nothing to do with the price of beer," said Alberta Liquor Control Board official Ken Baker on Friday morning. No loud howls are heard from the Alberta hotels' associ-

From one small beer to another Just 14 days ago our elegant prime minister gave a press conference and was asked if he might assess the performance of the press.

"If I hadn't thought that your performance had been almost perfect, I wouldn't have wished you a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. I think you boys and girls have done beautifully in your jobs and I believe that Santa Claus should remember you. Now, I would advise you not to take anything from a person who's not a real Santa Claus. Just make sure that the gifts you receive at Christmas are not in the form of favors for services rendered, and you and members of my party will march behind Santa Claus in the parade with great joy and equanimity." It was a dumb question, admittedly, but the answer from one of the presses' most sneering critics was simply theatre of the absurd. Of course, that phrase describes most press conferences, any-

Locally politics have taken a more subtle turn. There's Alf Hood, solid and straight forward, with his faintly military aura - in other words the epitome of a Victoria old boy — contesting the chairmanship of the regional board. What was all that blather about a mayoralty race between Mike Young and Sam Bawlf? Hood, who is widely respected for the quiet way he goes about his aldermanic duties, appears to be engaged in a flanking tactic for the seat of chief magistrate. It could be an interest ing municipal election, next time 'round

And down the street at the other seat of government there is much hushed talk about a new planning secretariat, whatever that means. It seems they are already offering jobs, although there is nothing new in that since the NDP took office. But planning for what? All levels of government these days are soaked in planners, thinkers, studiers and rational-izers. Theories abound but practice is still as imperfect as ever.

* * * Too bad governments won't just roll up their sleeves and get on with the job like Victoria's Cool-Aid. When Cool-Aid was set up to handle the country's youthful wanderings in the late 1960s there were dire warnings about it beco dope-freak hangout and all kinds of nasty things. Now it boasts a low-income dental clinic - with much thanks to Eugene Kaellis, a dentist who put ideals ahead of income - and a medical clinic, It also has been awarded one of two Commonwealth Youth Awards which are awarded annually to deserving organizations among 32 Commonwealth countries. But it's almost sad to see Cool-Aid knighted; the organization seemed to thrive as an underdog. That's the price

Memories From a Trip Back Home

By G. E. MORTIMORE

(Mortimore is a former columnist with the Colonist, now assistant professor of anthropology at the University of Guelph. He wrote this article under a Victoria dateline for The Globe and Four and a half hours by jet from an Ontario winter, returning for one of those rare visits to the home town that I bad left 12 years earlier, I found myself oddly hurt to see that while my world had stretched out to include new things and places, my mother's living-space had shrunk very small.

"She used to wear big hats and give tea-parties — and she had nice things in her house at Westholme," an older woman friend had observed at the dinner table. "I liked your mother. But you

The times of big hats and tea-parties were over. The "nice things" were scattered or lost in cupboards and attics. My mother's world had dwindled so small that there wasn't even room in it for the pictures of the grandsons as young boys which had hung in the room she had lately been forced to give up

Now she sat up and began laughing and talking about remembered events and comical sights and sounds around

"I liked my room at the other she said, and turned to the nurse's aide who was carrying drinks 'Can you bring my son a cup of tea as

The nurse's aide, a tall, cool young woman, did not answer. She merely tuned my mother out, as if she did not exist. This was the tactic she employed to defend herself against bothersome demands. Most people here were much less aware of their surroundings than my mother, who was supposed to be a transient patient on her way to somewhere else.

In several other visits, I met other staff members who were more responsive and welcoming. But that nurse's aide was the one I remembered.

Later I heard her brusquely turn aside a question about my mother's nightdress and slip which had disap-peared on their return from the drycleaners. I saw her engage in a wres-tling match with another patient who resented having someone else's clothes stored next to hers in the cupboard.

The private hospital was only part of a jumble of hometown sights and feelings: my old spindly house at Langford Lake, and the holly tree that was young when I left the place, now grown quite high and thick with unharvested berries. The news that the house in Duncan hedge, had been knocked down to make a gas station. A slicker, richer and bus ier look to downtown Victoria. Cute new touristy signs and facades. But the winter roses still blooming in the Empress Hotel grounds. Heart-twisting memories that surged out from familiar street corners.

And the changed appearance of friends like Bill Scott, who had gone white-haired and slightly stooped. He runs a pawnshop on Johnson Street and small guest hotel for retired people on commutes between this unlikely pair of enterprises in a 1959 Buick. He jollies along his guests with kisses and wallops on the shoulder and grows vegetables for the house in the rich soil which he composts with leaves and kelp.

The private room occupied by each guest (still at pre-inflation prices) conns a trimmed - down version of a life's belongings.

"I'm going to steal those one day," Bill said, motioning toward two fat an-tique Chinese jars, as he bussed an old lady on the right ear. "Aha, look at that," he exclaimed as he entered an old gentleman's room, stabbing a triumphant finger toward a dial thermometer he had secretly placed on the dresser in reply to a complaint that the room was chilly when the west wind blew. It registered 73 Fahrenheit. luests don't always like Bill's answers. But when they complain, he listens.

He lives on top of his guest house annex in a three-level carpeted den filled with Chinese curios and surmounted by a glass-sided lookout complete with wind-gauge and telescope. The lookout resembles a lightpouse tower; it commemorates his 22 years as a lighthouse technician on the coast of China, years of haggling and scheming to get jobs done in the China Maritime Customs Service and in a Second World War Japanese prison camp. This experience of managing small-scale labor and human problems on the tangled in terface between bureaucracy and the market (built upon a deprived child-hood on big-city streets in Britain) prepared him for what he now does.

Developers would love to get their hooks on the choice snob-appeal land occupied by Bill Scott's guest house, and build apartment towers there. But he won't let them in. He wants to keep the place as a senior citizens' refuge by turning over ownership to a committee of trusted people during his lifetime, retaining only an income from the property and staying on as manager as long as he can handle the job.

replacement for Bill Scott?" I asked.

When the ego-maniacs are in con-trol, we have Hitlers and Genghis Khans. Today the ego-maniacs are in control. The young people are going to change that.'

He frequently launches into set speeches of this kind, in response to dif-ficult questions. He quotes Shakespeare, Chairman Mao and himself in sudden staccato attacks on "stuffed shirts" and "bureaucratic idiots."

'They call me a crackpot," he ac knowledges. He is right. A lot of people refuse to take him seriously. What Happened To Jury System?

THE TORONTO STAR An Editorial

Under the Criminal Code it is an offence for a member of a jury to give information about its deliberations, even after a trial is over.

This has got the CBC into a hassle with the Ontario attorney general's department as a result of a broadcast interview with one of the jurors in the Demeter murder trial.

However that comes out, it on jurors makes it virtually impossible to have a thorough study made of the modern system and its effec-

Such a study is long over-due. There are indications of a growing lack of confidence in the jury system of trial Some research has been carried out in the United States, but almost none in Canada.

The most striking evidence of declining confidence is that nowadays only about 5 per cent of defendants in criminal cases who are entitled to it choose trial by jury instead of before a judge alone.

We need to know why, and also to answer a number of other questions about how juries function. The obvious body to carry out such a study is the Law Reform Commission of Canada, which is undertaking a review of our whole criminal procedure. The inquiry would have to include a number of interviews have actually served on

Some of the questions to be

• How is a jury verdict generally .reached? Is it a real consensus of all the jurors' opinions, or do one or two especially determined members impose their views on the rest? This latter possibility seems especially likely when the trial has been prolonged and the majority are anxious to get home to their

• To what extent, are jurors influenced by prejudice for or against a defendant be-cause of his race, nationality or religion or lifestyle? Are they generally readier to con-vict an outsider than someone who belongs to their own

• Does the average juror really understand the legal principle that a defendant in a criminal trial is presumed to be innocent until the crown has proved his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt? Or does he share — and act on — the common belief that the police wouldn't have arrested and charged the man if he wasn't guilty, so it's up to him to prove himself innocent?

How do jurors cope with complicated scientific evi-dence which is a part of so many modern trials? How do they resolve the problem, for example, when there is flat contradiction between the tes-timony of two doctors in a murder trial as to the cause or time of death, or as to the defendant's sanity?

• If the trial judge, s um ming up, strongly suggests that the defendant is guilty, do jurors commonly accept his guidance, or do they make up their own minds?

Answers to questions like these would help determine these would help determine the reliability of the jury sys-tem at present, and what changes might be needed in its operation — if indeed it, should be retained at all.—But the answers cannot be found so long as the Criminal Code locks the information about how juries actually work in the minds of those who have served on them.

The intent of the restriction in the wake of a trial. Without opening that possibility, Par-liament could amend the law to make it possible for jurors to speak freely to a responsible body such as the Law Re-

'noble, romantic'

It means, if Mr. Macdonald and Mr. Barrett adhere to it, that the B.C. government is prepared to allow the province's natural gas industry to go either bellyup or elsewhere on a matter of principle

There is something noble romantic, almost heroic about this. No doubt, the memory of the government doing what it thinks right will warm us when we go to cooking over a wood stove and huddling together for warmth in the rain

So, there will be the ocdoesn't care much who is right or wrong, but rather prefers to be warm and who suggests, poor misguided chap, that a government prepared to do what Mr. Barrett's seems prepared to do is shortsighted and foolish. But if he wants a practical gov ernment, he can move to Alberta, and B.C. is best rid of

Perhaps, as he sits in the warmth of his bungalow in the Alberta foothills, the carping critic will write a history of how the province to the west came to be darkened.

It will not be easy, because an historian seeks a clear

But let us try to help him, if we can. As well as can be determined, the B.C. Petroleum Corporation will make about $25 million this year from nat-ural gas and $125 million in 1975, because of the substantial export price increase that will apply through next year if the price doesn't rise fur ther, as everything suggests it

According to people who know about these things, BCPC won't tell Ottawa what thousand feet of gas, which is probably high, the fair mar-ket-value of B.C. gas would be 57 cents and B.C. producers would be taxed on that figure.

Since they are already taxed on 22 cents, the new tax bill would come from the 35 cents difference. Ottawa's corporate tax rate next year will be 28 per cent, meaning 9.8 cents in new federal taxes.

But the province taxes corporations too, on the federal tax base. The 12 per cent B.C. rate would add another 4.2 cents in provincial taxes for a total of 14 cents in new taxes. If these figures apply, Mr. Barrett would have to increase the price BCPC pays private producers from 22° private producers from 22 cents to 36 cents, which would put private producers exactly

That, of course, is the cost next year if B.C. decides to raise the price of gas. But Mr. Macdonala says that B.C. won't do that, and that the result will be a loss of per-

The tablet doesn't exaggerate the qualities of this sensitive young Englishman. He was 24 when he died. His observations and his contributions towards mapping the Arctic coast proves beyond doubt that he was brilliant.

On this long and arduous enterprise headed by four Royal Navy officers, Hood, a midshipman, kept a journal, as all officers were required to do, and painted the animals and birds of the north. The expedition proceeded overland from Hudson Bay to the mouth of the Coppermine River and thence eastward along the arctic coast.

In all, members of the party travelled a total of 5,550 miles by canoe and on foot, the first to traverse a portion of the arctic coastline. It resulted in important advances in the fields of geography, terceptial pagenting all pagenting al restrial magnetism, climatology, geology, ichthyology, ornithology, mammalogy and botany.

"The book really began," Colombo tells us, "in the "The book really began," Colombo tells us, "in the early years of elementary school." He confesses that his "first Canadian quotation," encountered in a school reader, seduced him when he was a student in Grade V. It was from an editorial by Joseph Howe, and it read, "We have beside us a mountain of Books, Magazines, Pamphlets and Newspapers that have been accumulating for the last two months, unopened and unread. Like a Turk, in the dim twilight of his Harem, we scarcely know which to choose. ." (I'd like to know what this image, which Colombo says he found "thrilling", would do for Marshall McLuhan.)

So Colombo has been brewing this collection more or less ever since, and the result is a massive amalgam of what appears to be every last scrap of major to marginal interest that anyone connected with Canada has ever penned or spoken. The book "should be seen as an ongoing endeavour", Colombo has announced, inviting corrections, endeavour", Colombo has announced, inviting corrections, additions, and comments from his readers. (Already he is working on a similar project, a collection of references to certain areas of Canadian life: politics, the arts, places, people, etc. The new book has been commissioned by Oxford University Press.) Whatever the degree of public response to this invitation, Colombo has probably found his life's work with Quotations. This edition wears the air of a working draft; successive revised editions of it could conceivably keep him usefully occupied for years to come. conceivably keep him usefully occupied for years to come.

Quotations has been roundly criticized for its length and grab-bag inclusiveness. But Colombo expected this: in his Preface he explains, "All along I have thought it better to include rather than to exclude." Besides, as anyone who enjoys browsing through the dictionary already knows, the bigger the better. This book is not meant to be useful in the manner of a field guide or phrasebook; it is simply meant to be used.

The best test of any reference book, they say, is to look up something you already know. (This reminds me of a student friend who can talk about Zen Buddhism for hours. He can sound terribly well-informed and impressive, except that when he switches to a topic which we know something about, he is often confused, inaccurate or misleading. It makes us worder rather about his sermisleading. It makes us wonder, rather, about his sermons on Zen.) At first I tried this method, and looked up Hans Selye. What I found was what I deserved, I guess someone else's favorite Selye quotations. It's no good looking for something you expect to find, then; the chief pleasures of this book are more likely to be serendipitous.

pleasures of this book are more likely to be serendipitous.

Next I tried playing a game with Colombo: I made a list of 12 men and 12 women who must, I felt sure, have uttered something worth quoting. Then I looked them up. Colombo fared very well; out of 24 names he had missed only five. As I immediately lost the list I have just made out a new one. This time, the missed nine of them. They were: Doris Anderson, Maria Campbell, Florence Chadwick, any one of the Dionne quintuplets (there are quotes from Papa Dionene, but surely one of the quints must have said something worth remembering). Jack McClelland, Duke Redbird, Donald Jack, John Connally and J. Frank Willis. (He also missed Mayor Walter Assef of Thunder Bay, whom we saw on the national news greeting the Queen and Prince Philip by saying "it's a pleasure to meet you, Prince, and your lovely wife," or something equally awful, but for that Colombo, if not Assef, can be forgiven.)

major oversight, although I was amused by the absence of anything from McClelland. There is, incidentally, a quotation from Mel Hurtig, who is Colombo's publisher.

It's a small society in which we live, and one of its many advantages lies in this very fact. Carada has often, with some justice, been accused of insularity, provincialism and pettiness. But it's also the kind of community where it is still possible to get to know one's neighbors. Colombo's Canadian Quotations had grasped that possibility and turned it into a printed fact. ty and turned it into a printed fact. And now, a few choice excerpts

But though Wilde believed that he lived in a decadent age, he escaped that phase of death rattle at where even the artist does not expect to be taken seriously. There's a lot of 'put on' about much contemporary art, but its basis is good-bumored rather than fraudulent. Be hip, be cool, have fun, and who cares about 'high seriousness'. On record Bisset's repetitive minimal word structures achieve a dimension halfway between mantra and jazz. Everyone to his tastes, I suppose, but it sounds a hell of a lot better than it looks.

Hockey: Cougars In Commendable Show

Part of one week's work in a brand new year and, in a brand new look, the Victoria Cougars aren't that far removed from being a very good hockey team if Thursday's display against the touring Czechoslovaklan under-23 team is

The Cougars gave it all they had before a full house, and were only beaten because of the superior skating ability of the visitors and an age differential that became more evident as the game wore its course.

After all, these were mere tee After all, these were mere teen-agers against more mature young men with an average four-year age spread between the two clubs. And as the Czech side, with some additions to come, is the one that is being groomed for the 1976 Olympics, much was expected of the visitors. And they didn't disappoint, either, coming on late, but clearly superior, for

On the whole, the tourists were faster, quicker on the puck and kept a constant pressure on the Cougar defence. Basically their main fault was sloppy clearing on defence.

Bob Leslie got the call for the Cougars in goal and there should be no doubt in that young man's mind that he turned in what undoubtedly was the finest 30 minutes of his career; and it was only fitting that even though he played only half. the game he be awarded one of the game's stars. He kept the Cougars in the battle with some scintillating saves in the first two periods and will possibly long remember his first game in international competition. And well he should.

Only The Very Best Play

Meanwhile, international rules generally proved no hard-Meanwhile, international rules generally proved no hard-ship for the Cougars to bear, although there were some petulant outbursts. For instance, there was no apparent reason for Kim Clackson to hit a Czech player over the head in the waning seconds. It only added a sour note to the pro-ceedings. Otherwise, there were the deterrents to consider. In international hockey, fighting is a no-no, and calls for instant dismissal. Cougars couldn't afford to take that chance and didn't try too many intimideting tactics either. As for the didn't try too many intimidating tactics either. As for the Czechs they play by those rules all the time, and always ap-peared capable of taking care of themselves.

So there were contrasting styles, which is natural, but if there was the one single facet in which the Cougars might have been found wanting, it was skating, which is the name

The Czechs were much stronger at the finish

It may be interesting to learn that in Czechoslovakia only the very best get to continue in organized hockey. Although their minor rockey program is much like any other youth program with various age classifications, starting at nine, the selection is more preferential as there are fewer teams.

Junior hockey begins at age 15, used to conclude at 18, but now extends to age 20 to conform to international standards. In addition every Czech young man must serve in the army for two years. If he's a good hockey player, he plays for the army, naturally. And only after his two-year hitch can he apply for a transfer back to his original club. Or maybe he can even stay in the army. Favors may be conferred for extraordinary talent.

And if they don't have anything like the draft system in minor hockey, as in Canada, youngsters aren't moved away from their home cities either. Unless they show exceptional talent, that is. So what else is new?

Discipline or Rapport?

As it is, Victoria fans saw for themselves the rigid discipline of European hockey. And whether they agreed with it or not was hard to determine. Hal Laycoe once said "I don't see anything wrong with a punch in the nose. It helps to establish your rapport with the opposition. And most Canadians seem to be of the same opinion.

Still, if there were more than a few instances Thursday when, under our code of ethics, a brawl of sorts might have erupted, and others where retaliation appeared in order, cooler heads always prevailed. So it can be done.

And there wasn't one fist fight. That was different! And frankly, it didn't detract from the wide-open play one iota.

So take your pick because tonight it's back to junior hockey, Canadian style. And don't bet this one against Medicine Hat won't be different and perhaps a pip too. But for better or worse, who knows?

Still, if the Cougars play as they did most of the time against the Czechs, they should do better than all right.

Because on Thursday they came of age. Internationally.

Most of them, and especially Leslie.

Player Injured Stopping Fight

By The Canadian Press

Bill Goldsworthy of Min-nesota North Stars discovered Friday his new self-assigned role as peacemaker doesn't really suit him.

The 30-year-old native of Kitchener, Ont., known for his aggressive style of play on the ice, tried to break up a fight among some of his team-mates early Friday and ended up with a severed tendon in one finger and cuts to-both hands for his effort.

A spokesman for the Na-tional Hockey League club said Goldsworthy apparently tried to break up the alterca-tion and "was pushed through the glass door on a fire extin-guisher" at the Pittsburgh hotel where the North Stars were staying following Thursday night's 6-3 loss to the Pen-

A New Era Begins Monday In UVic's McKinnon Building

Times Staff

Archie McKinnon Building, new $2.4 million dol-lar athletic, physical education and recreation complex at the University of Victoria, opens its doors Monday for what athletic director Mike Elcock sees as a shakedown

'We literally" don't know how the university is going to react to the new facility," Elcock said in his bright new of-fice Friday, "but judging by the enquiries and initial reac-tion I've had, I'd say it's going to get tremendous use. I have the next term to see what the university requirements will be."

Official opening of the building, named after the long-time physical education director of the Victoria YMCA and Olympic swimming and track coach, isn't until Feb. 17. Students and faculty will begin using it Monday, however, and between then and the summer, it will be the scene of at least nine non-university

"There is no doubt we'll be moving into an aquatic sports program, depending on fi-nances," Elcock said. Water polo competition will begin

A pair of Friday results in the Western Canada Hockey League combined to give Victoria some breathing room atop the Western Division standing but did nothing to crase the anticipation that has been building up in the Cougars' corner.

But even before the results were finalized, the Cougars couldn't hide their antici-pation they showed toward tonight's Memorial Arena meet-ing with the Tigers.

"I only wish I could be there," said Cougar coach Pat Ginnell, who over-extended a return to the West Coast by staying on to handle the team Friday.

Ginnell left Winnipeg and the world junior tournament Thursday to coach Cougars for their international meetwith Czechoslovakia's Young Olympics. He was supposed to return to Winnipeg early Friday to rejoin Saskatoon's Jack McLeod in handling the Canadian represent-

Return-to-Nature Sparked Heyerdahl Studies

By TIM RADFORD

Manchester Guardian

LONDON In 1937 Thor Heyerdahl left his home in Larvik to do what Paul Gaugain did and most people just dream about, and that was to Go Back to nature on a South Sea Island. He and his young bride Liv picked out Fat-Hiva in the marquesas group and went by steamer and copra schooner to live in a bamboo hut off coconuts and bananas and breadfruit and prawns cooked on a fire made by rubbing sticks together.

They were the only Europe ans on a tropical volcanic is-land well off shipping routes and they eschewed all artifacts of progress except the machete and for awhite they found peace and contentment. They made friends with an old cannibal and found puz-zling evidence of an earlier, apparently different civilization, a find which was to lead the young Norwegian zoolo-gist into a career in Pacific He also found a distinctively

c at ed badmen, Haggard stands out. Without ever-staging a PR campaign to make his point, he's long been country - western's foremost musical maverick, not only paying tribute to his idols Jimmie Rodgers and Bob Wills but also incorporating Wills, but also incorporating their long dormant jazz and blues influences into his own brand of country. The result has been an astonishingly consistent string of hit singles and well-turned of hit singles and well-turned albums. Haggard is that rarity among country performers, a popular recording artist who, following his own demon, insists on quality. He has never fleshed out his albums with other folks hits through the yodel mill one more time, nor has he let his career be shoehorned into predictable formulas. His talent and ambition are too big ent and ambition are too big

Haggard shapes his music as a singer, songwriter and bandleader (the Strangers, his back-up group; ranks among the best bands in country history). As a singer, he evokes Lefty Frizzell and George Jones, two of modern country's central stylists; like both, he is at ease on uptempo material as well as ballads. His voice has a distinctive breaking point where his reso-nant delivery slips into a brit-tle half-whine. Haggard uses this device to telling effect, particularly on bittersweet la-ments.

As a writer, Haggard has mined a wide-range of themes that now form an outlook every bit as consistent and arresting as Hank Williams'. He started his career fixated on a 1c o ho 1 ("Swinging Doors"), moved into a desperado phase ("I'm a Lonesome Fugitive"), and finally settled into assertive but confessional statements of belief and pride ("Mama" Tried," "I Take a Lot of, Pride in What I Am"). In more recent years, he has In more recent years, he has composed some of modern country-western's finest love songs, direct and traditional yet understated and simply sung ("Today I Started Lov-ing You Again," "It's Not Love But It's Not Bad").

In his lyrics, Haggard depicts a world ravaged by time, where love and memory form a frail bond sustaining virtue. His is the pathos of an American traditionalist in an age where the prairie romanric's avocations — hopping freights, bumming from labor camp to labor camp, drifting through towns and barrooms — have become obsolete.

What saves Haggard from pure bathos is indeed the balance and scope of his vision.

The purveyor of a mythic and doomed past is also the wary beneficiary of a prosperous present.

As "Old Man on the Mountain," his most recent hit (included on Merle Haggard Presents His 30th Album) indicates, Haggard also enjoys the role of the salty hedonist

Van Morrison Walks Thin Line

Van Morrison is an enigmatic figure. Although he prac-tices the art of a flamboyant soul trouper, he maintains an oddly detached, awkward stage presence. His vision is hermetic, his energy implosive-yet his vocation is pub-

These are curious contradictions for a performer to sustain, but they help lend Morrison's art its resonance. His distinction lies in his fusion of a visceral intensity with an introspective lyric style—a potentially powerful amalgam owing as much to Bobby Bland as to Bob Dylan. Although his lyrics have often been ludicrous, and his bands merely competent, Morrison's singing animates his material: Like Billy Stewart, the '60s soul artist who scatted rison is capable of dismem bering a song, using the frag-ments for audacious vocal Morrison, however, is an inconsistent performer. His singing, at best-fluent and assured, can become strained; his mannerisms, at best the hallmarks of a style, can be foreced, unsettling like a movie out of synch; his lyrics, at best carrying the convictions of the style at best carrying the conviction of spontaneous creation, can become belabored, inten-tionally arty. Morrison in fact walks a thin line between pre-tense and passion.

Veedon Fleece, his newest studio disc, illustrates the pit-falls in Morrison's approach. With its splintered lyrics rei-terated over swells of sound, the record's first side returns to the style of Astral Weeks (1968). While this approach can be hypnotic, its recycling on Veedon Fleece flounders in Morrison's own cliches.

Throughout, Morrison suf-fers from wobbly pitch, several abortive experiments (the falsetto on "Who Was that Masked Man?"), and a familiar tendency to mumble rather than enunciate. Too often he suggests a pinched nerve drowning in porridge.

The lyrics add to the te um. Take "You Don't Pull No" Punches But You Don't Push the River." Prominent lines include: "Going out in the country—Get right down to the real soul—Get down to the West Coast.''' Also: "Standing with the sisters of mercy— Looking for the Veedon fleece." Or again: "We were contemplation' William Blake and the Eternals.'

This is pompous tripe. Van-Morrison doesn't need it, and neither do we. This kind of.

Express (Van and the group have since parted ways). The charts, scored for strings and woodwinds rather than horns, try for a dreamy, pseudo-jazz feel; instead of punching Morrison along, the band lays back and meanders. The end product is mood music for mature hippies.

There are some exceptions "Bulbs," launched by brush-work on the drums and clipped, almost countryesque guitar licks, features a force-ful vocal. But the majority of Veedon Fleece lacks focus and drive; as a result, the album suonds self-indulgent.

Morrison's current live ma-teial takes a different tack from that on Veedon Fleece. His new trio promises to add rhythmic kick to Morrison's act, and Van himself, when last seen, sang with guts and skill. Coming from anyone, else. Godfather II: 'Earnest Confusions'

By VINCENT CANBY If Francis Ford Coppola were a less intelligent and less talented filmmaker one might indulge the failed aspirations of "The Godfather, Part II" if not the thick fog of boredom that settles in before the film is even one hour old.

Clumsy directors may not be entitled but because their gaffes are not exactly unexgaffes are not exactly unexpected, they are more easily accommodated. We snicker and laugh at multi-million-dollar dreadfuls like "The Valachi Papers" and "Crazy Joe." Our good spirits remain intact since there's no particular surprise or sorrow. The earnest confusions of "The Godfather. Part II" are some-Godfather, Part II" are something else again. They look rip-off one of the best, most successful commercial American movies ever made, Cop-pola's original screen adapta-tion of Mario Puzo's "The Godfather.'

Rip-off is an unkind word and, in this case, not really accurate since it implies a willingness to take the easy vious, cheapest manner an earlier success, Now I hardly think that Coppola, Puzo (who collaborated with him on the new screenplay) and Para-mount Pictures did not hope to make a bundle on "Part II," but it's apparent in the physical scope (New York, Las Vegas, Sicily, the Caribbean), expense and shape of the new film that this was meant to be something more than a sequel, something more than a revisit to a planet of murderous, vengeful

Well it is and it isn't.

It's actually two films cross-cut into each other. The first is the story of young Vito Corleone (who grew up to be the Mafia don played by Mar-lon Brando in "The Godfalon Brando in "The Godfa-ther"), from his early days in Sicily when his father was murdered by the Black Hand to his first rather nobly mo-tivated criminal triumph in New York's Little Italy in 1917. The second is the story of Michael Corleone (Al Pa-cino), who inherited the Corleone family control from old Vito at the end of "The Godfather" and here goes on to win a Las Vegas gambling em-pire, with time out for an

"Part II" is as stuffed with material as a Christmas goose. It's a mass (sometimes mess) of plots, subplots, characters, alliances, betrayals, ambushes, renunciations, impossible to figure out who's doing what to whom, not, I suspect, because its mode is suspect, because its mode its been cut and edited in what looks to have been desperation, a quality that "Part IV" shares with another Coppola film, "There are dozens of narratives gridge or process of the second process of the second

There are dozens on narratives going on more or less simultaneously in "Part II," a couple of which give every sign of being-material enough for an interesting self-sustaining individual film if lifted out of this fractured epic.

One of the most remarkable qualities of the original "The terms of action. The relent-less forward motion of the film was as much the content of the film as the gang wars it seemed to be about. The ending was inevitable and tragic.

The Pross-cutting in the new film gives it a contemplative sir, but the truths it contemplates about fate, family and feuds seem hardly worth all the fuss and time (three hours and 20 minutes). hours and 20 minutes).
I've been told that one of Coppola's intentions in "Part II" was to de-romanticize "The Godfather," which some critics had accused (wrongly, I think) of glorifying crime. At the end of "The Godfa-ther," Michael Corleone, the once sensitive Ivy League stu-dent who has become the new don, is left lonely in his new authority. At the end of "Part II" he is still lonely, though we are asked to believe that he is now a more ruthless, more wracked man who suspects enemies everywhere around him and as easily orders the execution of a brother as he cooperated in the execution of a brother-in-law in the first film. The dif-ference between Michael in the firset film and "Part II" is not one of real substance but of degree.

"Part II" seems to have been written by writers wear-been written oy writers wear-ing wooly mittens—the dia-logue is that clumsy. You get the idea when Kay, Michael's middle-class, WASP wife, admits that what Michael wasn't. "It was an abortion, Michael," says Kay who, Michael," says Kay who, though grieving, has a way with words, "just like our marriage is an abortion."

By EDWARD GREENFIELD GSTAAD, Switzerland The din over the telephone is terrifying. The idea that vio-linist Menuhin has a quiet time in his Swiss haven up in the mountains at Gstaad could hardly be more mis-leading. Amid the noise of the family offstage the maestro welcomes me, and with saint-ly calm arranges a meeting.

Prudendy I suggest that as well as having lunch (with the family), we might have a tete-a-tete afterwards. Anyone who thinks that pure food means dull food or small portions has not visited the Menuhins. Yehudi serves the Menuhins. Yehudi serves while Diana acts as mistress of ceremonies. She apologizes of ceremonies. She aposphus that so many members of the family have just departed (only eight at table). She spots any potential shortage of food or drink. She herself eats little, but helps our digestions with a firework stream of stories.

When at last we are quiet and alone, I ask him as bluntly as I can what he regards as his own faults. The world, I point out, has the view of him as sort of saint.
Menuhin, plainly a little worried, at once exculpates himself from any such accusation. He claims he is selfish for wanting total harmony of stories.

point of view, because it is to my own peace of mind. I never repeat something that might offend anyone."

In particular he blames himself for being impatient with his family. "There is no better who have been an upbetter upbringing than an up-bringing by one's own chil-dren," he says. "It is essen-tial to be absolutely honest to one's children It's no use put-ting on airs when they know the parent inside out." As I witness 'myself, his children count him the most under-standing of fathers, "except that we don't see enough of

Though in any year he will be in London at his Highgate home for something like 100 days (Diana's calculations) that time is split into fragments of a few days each. Particularly when the children were at school, the summer holiday in Gstaad was the only period when the family was united for any length of time.

Talking to me, he sits crosslegged in his armchair. Is that the influence of Yoga, I ask? Well, his relaxed cross-

He earned discipline from his parents, who devoted their whole lives to their children's development "almost as unpaid help." He reas unpaid help. He re-members that his father always carried his violin case when he was a child, wherev-er they travelled. His first musical memory, he says, was of his father singing him to sleep. He had a vast reper-tory and young Yehudi quick-ly learned to sing some of them himself. Singing himself to sleep, he invented tunes of

A sense of competition is needed, he feels, and his mind turns readily enough his mind turns readily enough to the problems of the Yehudi Menuhin School. "There is no Menuin School. There is no sense of oppression in the school," he points out. "If things are allowed to become too haphazard," he says "authority has to be hoarded up, and it's worse for the child in The qualities that he and his colleagues look for at auditions are readily enough recognized: the child must first love music; then have a good ear, then show manual co-ordination. But above all art-Menuhin looks for, signs that the child wants music so badby that everything else will if necessary be secrificed. He mentions to me the "temendous assurance" of a sixyear-old, Jane Atkins, who is coming to the school this year,

The new charges, to begin this spring, double the rate-that prevailed six months ago and are part of a package that will make telephones, telegrams and related services all dearer.

"We are very sorry," said Sir William Ryland, the genial head of the Post Office. Like everyone else here, he blames higher costs, particularly for the nation's 200,000 postmen, who now make $92 a week.

Despite grumblings from irate citizens, Britain's mail service outshines that in the U.S. and most of Europe. Central London enjoys two deli-veries a day during the week and one on Saturday, although should be all mopped up by Monday morning, Langford Provincial Emergency Program co-ordinator Al LeQuesne said today:

LeQuesne, the Langford fire chief, said the oil leaked out of a tank at one of the mobile homes in the Hidden Valley Mobile Home Park on Florence Lake Road late Thursday Owners of the trailer park Friday morning contained the spill by booming it with plastic hosing, LeQuesne said, and peat moss was put over the thin film of oil.

The moss will be picked up Monday morning by P.E.P and Ministry of Transport workers and LeQuesne said he expects no contamination from the spill.

The stove oil film is very thin, he said "and I can't see it harming anything." $^{\prime\prime}$

But the Florence Lake Involvement Association is worried the oil will wash up on the shores and harm nesting birds.

Association president Axel Brock-Miller said he felt the provincial government and the Capital Regional District have shirked their duties in not demanding better controls on the growing mobile home park.

LeQuesne agreed that installation of the tank "left a bit to be desired. He said the tank had been mounted on slats but had sank into the clay soil and a copper line leading into the mobile home had broken.

He said a complete inspection of all oil tanks in the trail-park will be carried out Monday "to make sure this doesn't happen again.

an oversimplified model, he drescribes child-rearing's evo-lution from a time when infanticide was common, at the beginning of Christianity. In fact, he describes Christianity as a reaction to the "trauma of infanticide" in which people turned to worship "the dead son."

After infanticide, the next child-rearing mode in his scheme of things was one of "abandonment." It prevailed from the fourth to the 13th centuries. He describes it in the book he edited, "The History of Childhood (The Psychohistory Press; Harper Torchbooks. Due out this month) this way: Parents would send their children off to a "wet nurse, to the monastery or nunnery to monastery or nunnery, to foster families, to the homes

ject them to "severe emotional abandonment

He thinks feudalism was the result. "You've got to see how a feudal lord knights a perhe said the other day in his Broadway office, "how he slaps you on the face and he kisses you on both sides and takes your hand—these are all fatherly gestures. 'I will not abandon you,' is what he says, essentially, in the feudal oath."

As parents gradually over-came their abandoning ways in the 18th century, they began to be "intrusive" in-stead; they would keep the child, but they would take over his mind and train him to do their will."

The trend progressed to become, in the 19th and 20th centuries, a milder form, which deMause calls "socializing." The children these rigid child-rearing modes pro-duced became a corps of industrialists and workers. All the while, parents were showing greater empathy for their children and as a result, punishing them less severely. And yet, you say, with all this progress, how is in that so many people are still vicious with their children? The rea-son, in deMause's view, is that these parents are 'arrested' in the psychoanalytical sense, at some previous stage of development.

And, you ask, what is so wonderful about now? His answer is that while the last generation of parents was still at the intrusive or socializing stage, many of today's parents have reached the 'helping'' stage, in which they have such a high degree of empathy for their children that they realize that children even have rights—that chil-dren do not exist for their parents' benefit. parents' benefit.

He says that it's been point ed out to him that couples today frequently decide not to have children at all. His challengers see that as proof that people are rejecting children. But deMause demurs. What it shows, he says, is that married couples are more aware than ever that a child demands love and attention, and has a right to those Rembrandt Sold NEW YORK (AP) — Co-imbia University has sold a Rembrandt portrait to an un-disclosed buyer to raise money, the university said Friday. The purchase price was more than $1 million for Man with Arms Akimbo, a source said. The price may have been more than double source said. The price may have been more than double that amount. The painting, roughly a yard square, was donated to Columbia in 1958 by Huntington Hartford, the are patron who is heir to the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. fortune. He bought the painting for $185,000 four-decades ago.

Different Digs With Different Goals in Mind

LIMIN, Greece (UPI) - In Limin, capital of the island of Thassos, oilmen mix with French and Greek archae-

It worries some of the island's 13,000 inhabitants who see the emergence of a bigtime oil industry as a threat to the tourist industry that thrives on such sights as the ruined temples of Athena and Apollo, the sanctuaries of Poseidon, Hercules and Pan, several ancient tombs, a theatre, forum and the mar-ble walls of an acropolis.

"We are delighted at the thought of having a large industry in our area, but many of us are afraid of oil pollutions."

"Even if the pipelines that will carry the oil to the refinery do not leak, tankers company and going are sure the ing and going are sure to sully our waters."

Others, like Rev. George Xanthiotis, a priest from the village of Limenaria, worry

"The discovery of oil is a gift from heaven," Father Xanthiotis said. "Many are those who cannot find work in this part of the country and emigrate to Germany. The oil industry will employ many people."

The archaeòlogists and the oilmen are not at odds.

The former have been excavating the island since 1957, carefully working themselves though layers back to the 7th century B.C., when Ionians from the Island of Paphos first settled Thassos.

Later, Greeks fought fierce wars with Persians, Macedon-ians and Romans over Thas-sos' gold mines.

The domain of the oilmen is just off the coasts, which are, lined with tourist hotels and

Norwegian Sea Promising Oil

As oil and gas discoveries mushroom in many parts of the world, the Norwegian Sea, said to be one of the most promising areas, anywhere, remains untapped. But sever-al projects are in the works.

A U.S.-financed expedition using the American research vessel Glomar Challenger drilled 16 holes into the floors of the Norwegian and Green-land seas this summer and found traces of oil in the Norwegian Sea beneath 4,800 feet of water.

The area where the oil deposit was found appears to be submerged extension of the continental shelf about 200 miles off the coast of Norway.

The U.S. drilling program, launched about six years ago, has now stirred up a political nas now surred up a pointed controversy, with news of the oil find. Dear Mr. Hobbs:

IW/bj

It is a real pleasure for me to convey to the Victoria Times: It is a real pleasure for me to convey to the Victoria Times and The Daily Colonist a sincere "Thank You" for the courtesy and cooperation received over the 7 years of operation with the Downtown Victoria Association.

This Association has seen many changes in Downtown Victoria, due to the increase in population and the result of careful City planning. As a result of the untiring efforts of the Downtown Victoria Association, As a result of the untiring efforts of the Downtown Victoria Association, we are constantly welcoming new businesses to Downtown Victoria which results in a greater variety of shops, more restaurants and entertainment. we are constantly welcoming new businesses to Downtown Victoria which results in a greater variety of shops, more restaurants and entertainment

This, of course, couldn't have been achieved without the cooperation of Victoria Press and the complete coverage of the lower Island This, of course, couldn't have been achieved without the comarket obtained through the medium of our daily newspapers. The story was told countless times to your thousands of readers that "There is more for you Downtown". Also a fine job is done each month when the message is you Downtown". Also a fine Job is done each month when the message is conveyed through the display ads of our merchants that it is "Bonus Day Downtown". The results of the "90 Minute Saving Spree" is another fine example of your outstanding assistance.

Our main objective is that we will work together to make shopping in Downtown Victoria an unique experience.

Yours sincerely,

... Great Din of Trumpets' Swells St. Andrew's Choir

By ELEANOR BOYLE

Five months ago St. Andrew's Cathedral in Victoria had no real choir. Today its choir is 40 strong and growing every day. "Enthusiasm is very infec-tious," said group director Tony Nicholas whose love of church and music is the choir's driving force. Christmass day's 11 a.m. mass at the cathedral was sung so joyfully and reverently that part of the congregation was moved to a standing ovation after the service.

People are still talking about that day.

The voices, singing carols and sacred music, were accompanied by trumpet and by solo violin and other brass sections as well on Christmas

Nicholas sees real value in using musical instruments in church, and quotes Kings II 6:14 saying "As for himself he went dancing with all his might there in the Lord's presence — so David and Israel with him brought back the ark with rejoicing and a great din of trumpets."

Psalm 150 includes: "with the bray of the trumpet praise him . . ." adds Nicholas.

It was very loud," he said.
The use of rock music in church is an unfortunate re-

When we had the changes in the church, music just collapsed. Choirs disappeared, and the Latin Gregorian, which people had depended on went.

The Catholic church had never sung in English," said Nicholas. When English replaced

Latin as the language of the service, people felt they should no longer sing in Latin

Nicholas deeply regretted the popular death of the chant, and noted that some churches are bringing it back in English, among them Westminster Abbey in Mission

Guerrillas Seek Accord

MOMBASA, Kenya (UPI) Leaders of Angola's three main guerrilla groups who have fought Portugal's rule for the past 14 years held an unprecedented meeting Fridence agreement.

President Jomo Kenyatta, the host, and the Angolan delegates all expressed optimism the rebels could resolve their internal differences to try to end 500 years of colonial rule in the African territory at a meeting with Portuguese representatives in Lisbon possibly only a week away.

A record number of homi cides were committed in at least two United States cities Detroit and Chicago in 1974, but police records show that North America's largest city, New York, recorded a decline during the first 10 months of the year. Statistics were not available major Canadian cities polled, but figures for Montreal and Vancouver pale by compari-son with those in the three or Toronto, one of three U.S. cities.

On a per capita basis, Detroit, with a population of 1.511,482, retained its dubious distinction of being the murder capital of the U.S. and there were indications the situation would worsen in 1975.

The homicide toll last year reached 801 in Detroit, 968 in Chicago, 1 268 10 months in New York, 65 in Montreal and 30 in Vancouver. Figures for Toronto are expected to be released in two weeks by the Homicide investigators in Chicago, population 3,366,957, speculated that the city's death toll by violence could reach 1,100 this year.

In Detroit also, police suggested the record would be broken again. It was there, too, the first homicide of 1975 occurred, only minutes into the new year.

months of 1973. -Montreal, with a poulation of 2.1 million, had 54 homicides in 1973, but the population then was two million.

Vancouver homicides in-creased by five during the Although the number of homicides and rapes decreased in Toronto last year, Metro Police Chief Harold Adamson said the over-all crime rate is higher. Statistics will not be released until Jan. 23, he said. Chief Adamson attributed the increase, which he says will continue to be lower that year, and indications are that these factors will worsen in tro's growing size, population and the permissiveness of to-day's society.

this theoretical protection.

The ghosts of these home-made ghosts could well plague the gardeners in the future.

learned the differences between glass and plastic

On a winter day with bright sunshine and an outside tem-perature near 35 degs., the temperature under plastic would rise to 80 degs., but 30 minutes after the sun was off the plastic the temperature inside and outside would be

This meant the plants were subjected to a 50 degree drop in temperature within half an hour, and resulted in severe plant losses. The hand-fired heating systems we installed needed constant attention throughout the night to maintain a reasonable heat within Plastic film was said to make an airtight structure free of draughts and heat losses through cracks such as we find in structures made of lapped or butted glass. This was considered to be a desira-

GARDENING jack beastall

In practice we discovered that the leakage through cracks kept the air in motion, tling at floor level. Under plastic there was no air mo-tion and the temperature at soil level in an unheated structure could drop three to five degrees below the outside temperature. This never hap-pened in a wood and glass

The reason for this was found when we learned about heat rays and light rays. Heat reaches the earth as light rays from the sun which give up their heat only when they strike a solid object such as enclosed area. These rays, actually short waves, pass free-ly through both glass and

As the temperature of the As the temperature of the objects within the enclosed space becomes greater than the surrounding air temperature, heat rays are radiated which, in turn, increase the temperature of the air.

These heat rays are long waves which cannot pass through glass or wood, therefore the temperature within a glass house drops very slowly glass house drops very slowly over a number of hours. But the long waves of heat can pass through plastic as freely as the short waves of fast as light came in, the out-side and inside temperatures equalizing rapidly once the heat source is removed (sun-set or a low fire).

Unfortunately, when heat waves escape through plastic their moisture content is deposited on the plastic because of its resistance to water and water vapor.

This increase in free mois-ture within the enclosed area plus sudden variations in temperature combine to create serious plant problems.

These problems were finally solved by installing automatic heating plants, humidity controls, automatic air intake fans with heaters attached to prevent chilling, automatic exhaust fans, and devices known as turbulators to keep the air moving, which to-gether cost four times as much as a good glass house. Going back to the ghosts in the garden. Under plastic the plants will be subjected to un-reasonably high temperature for the time of year whenever the sun is shining, and terrific temperature changes when clouds pass over the sun, or at sundown.

The high temperature will encourage new growth at a time the plants should be dor-mant, and would be dormant mant, and would be dormant without the protective covering. A cold spell will quickly kill this new growth because plastic cannot retain heat.

Rapid heat loss combined with the mass of moisture on the inner surface not only lowers the inside temperature but also has an adverse effect. but also has an adverse effect on the plant's constitution, making it less able to adjust to weather changes when un-covered. The trapped mois-ture also encourages fungous freezes to the foliage, causing the plant cells to burst and the twigs to die. The samekind of plant nearby but un-covered may not be damaged because air movement reduces frost intensity.

Weather conditions severe enough to damage exposed plants will kill the same kind of plant that has been subjected to artificial conditions under a plastic wrap, because against cold.

Lack of flowers, poor flowering, lack of new growth, sudden dropping of foliage, and inability to adjust to normal mal seasonal changes, are some of the effects recorded the following spring, summer, and fall, on plants that have been plastic wrapped over

Cabinet Setting Up Super-Advisor Group

The provincial government has approved construction of a $500 million hydro-electric river near Trail. (See artist's conception on page 2)

The Seven Mile Dam is expected to produce its first power in 1980 and initially yield 525,000 kilowatts with provision for another 175,000-kilowatt generator.

Resources Minister Bob Williams announced the approval Friday and said all power generated at the dam will be consumed in B.C. He said the dam will flood about 500 acres but will have pact of any potential dam site

Nearly 1,000 people will be employed at the project during the peak of construction and Williams said the project will draw on the skilled labor force already in the area winding up work on the Kootenay Canal project.

First contract to be awarded at the site will be for preparation of the camp and that initial work is expected to begin almost immediately.

The first major contract will be for excavation of a 60divert the river flow and permit construction of the main dam in the riverbed. that work is scheduled to begin in the spring.

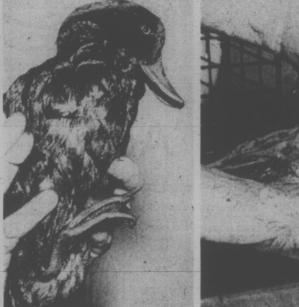

The contract for construction of the cofferdams, the spillways, the main dam and the adjacent powerhouse will be awarded in 1976.

JANITOR TALKS

Negotiations will start next Friday in an attempt to resolve a dispute over janitorial workloads at Greater Victoria school board.

TO START FRIDAY

The move is part of a Labor Relations Board order bringing a halt Monday to janitors refusing to service school rentals in evening hours since Dec. 9.

Two board members, Angus Macdonald and Kenneth Martin, will come to Victoria to assist in the negotiations between the school board and Local 382 of the Canadian Union of Public Employees.

Saskatoon Takes On Swedes at Fitness

MONTREAL (CP) fitness competition this spring will test that nasty rumor about the 60-year-old Swede being in better shape than the 30-year-old Canadian The citizens of Saskatoon will compete in a three-day fitness match with the residents of Umea, in northern Sweden, that might settle the myth once and for all.

The special transatlantic meet scheduled for May 12-14 is the result of enthusiasm generated in Saskatoon almost two years ago by Participaction, a non-profit agency set up in 1971 with the idea of getting Canadians into better physical condition. In the Saskatoon-Sweden competition, residents of each city will be simply encouraged to get out of their nated nights and walk around the block. The city able to turn out the most enthusiasts wins the competition.

This follows the basic plan of a highly-successful "fitness night" in Saskatoon in Febru-In an interview Friday, Keith McKerracher, director of Participaction, said he thinks Canadians will prove themselves better than the Swedes. Noting that 70,000 of Saskatoon's 140,000 residents took part in 1973, McKerracher said his observations from a recent visit to Sweden left him with the impression that the welfare state in Sweden has completely sapped the idea of competition1" Canada's ambassador to Sweden will watch the three days of competition in Umea while the Swedish ambassador to Canada will go to Saskatoon for the match.

Service clubs, schools and church groups in the respec-tive cities will be paired off against their counterparts. Radio and television stations climates and size. It will be a cultural exchange as well.

Each class in Umea schools in Saskatoon are preparing packages to exchange with he news media in Umea and will receive brochures of inham radio links will be made formation' about Saskatoon

McKerracher said. The plan has the blessing of McKerracher said, after a the city councils of both Saskatoon group went to Swe-cities; which have identical den in early December.
